Though the villagers alleged that one Baidei Padal, 45, died of jaundice on December 19, but the health officials have dismissed the allegations.

"The woman had gone to Andhra Pradesh and there she was down with fever. She had returned to village without completing her treatment there and had not approached health staff here. Hence, it is not confirmed which disease killer her," said Arun Padhi, additional district medical officer, public health. Official sources said the villagers are panicked and may depend on tribal healers, which will further aggravate the situation. Meanwhile, the health department has launched an awareness drive at Podalguda on Monday and the villagers were made aware of the precautionary measures required to be taken against the disease. All the water sources of the village have been purified and the villagers asked to approach the health staff if they find any symptoms of the disease and not to depend on traditional method of treatment, Murmu said.
